

Professor Alexander Adum Kwapong was the First African Vice-Chancellor of the University of Ghana, which is one of the oldest universities in sub-Saharan Africa. His memoirs recount the trajectory of his career from school days in Ghana to Cambridge University in the UK and back to Ghana, followed by a distinguished international career in the furtherance of higher education and development on the continent.

Ernest Aryeetey

Vice Chancellor, University of Ghana